Women's Health Care PhysiciansCompany Funds a Physicians-Only Forum*

TRUMBULL, CONN., July 24, 2008 – CooperSurgical today announced the launch of a networking site for women's health care specialists. The site, www.ObGynForum.org, is designed to enhance the way clinicians communicate and share information on any issue concerning the practice of women's health. The Forum provides a venue for an open discussion on clinical, business and social issues. Apart from providing funding to develop and maintain the site, CooperSurgical does not actively engage in or endorse the views contained within The Forum.

This confidential venue enables clinicians to privately communicate ideas, share best practices, ask questions and obtain insights from their peers. Content on The Forum is user-generated and reviewed by their peers.

Cheryl Bogardus, VP of Marketing at CooperSurgical, states: "The ObGyn is the hero in women's health. Their everyday practice provides challenges, from business issues to clinical questions. CooperSurgical's funding of this forum is our way of recognizing our heroes and providing them a forum to share best practices and do more good.”

Membership is entirely free, but limited to physicians with an interest in women’s health issues. Clinical status is validated to ensure that only qualified participants are posting. No lay-person or corporate participation is permitted. Member identity is confidential and will not be made available to anyone outside of the community.

CooperSurgical, Inc., is a wholly owned subsidiary of The Cooper Companies (NYSE:COO). The company, headquartered in Trumbull, CT, produces and markets a wide array of products for use by women’s health care clinicians.
